The Roar of the Sea.

Lexision (Mc.) Journal.

There is a story that Mr. Eliot Glover of Portland, formerly of this city, related apropos of sounds out of the clear sky. I was in Farmington, said he, visiting my uncle. On Christmas night I attended the Christmas festival with my relatives, and it was a clear, starlit night, for I remember at the close of the Christmas tree feetival they sent a fire balloon into the air, and it went straight up and seemed to hang over us quite stationary. Then it took a course in another direction and seemed to float over towards Lewiston. The next day was Sunday, and after breakfast I welked out with my uncle. It was a very still day, without a breezy, apparently, from any quarter. Smoke rolled up straight into the sky. We were walking silently along when my uncle stopped and said: "What do you hear?" I listened. "It sounds like the roar of the sea," I said. It didonound like it—the low monotone of the surfupon the shore, the ceaseless roar of the ocean is not the sea. It must be the wind." "The wind?" asked my uncle; "where do you see it? Look at those trees. They would sing if any trees were singing, and they are quict." Sure enough it wasn't the wind, and if not the wind what was it? It must be the ocean. We listened to it for five minutes. It boomed and roared sullenly. I was convinced that it was the sea. In the afternoon I met a well-known Farmington gentleman out walking and eaked him if he had heard any sound odd or strange. He had the want't two stores and the said that was the sea. In the afternoon I met a well-known Farmington gentleman out walking and eaked him if he had heard any sound odd or strange. He had the want't the stope of the control of the properties of the properties of the properties. The little braid her with the wind what was it? It must be the ocean. We listened to it for five minutes. It boomed and roared sullenly. I was convinced that it was the sea. In the afternoon I met a well-known Farmington gentleman out walking and eaked him if he had heard To refer the matter. It boomed and roared stillenly. I was convinced that it was the sea, in the afternoon I met a well-known Farmington gentleman out walking and seked him if he had heard any sound odd or strauge. He said that he heard the wind in the trees. I asked him if he could see any trees in motion, and he said no. I told him I thought it was the sea. He poohed at first, but subsequently I heard him telling a friend that he had heard the sea roaring. That night we looked at the map, and found that the nearest points at which the sea came with Boothbay and Harpswell, and they are from seventy to eighty miles as the birds fly. The next day the newspaper brought reports of a fearful storm along the coast, with high seas and damaging surf along the shore. I have not hecitated to believe that we heard the surf at Boothbay that Sundey in Farmington. What current of upper sir brought it that seventy miles? The day was as calm as the calm of the ocean at rest.

That was a graceful thing Mark Twain lid with regard to his last magazine ar-icle, "English as She Is Taught," in the april Century. It seems that a Miss Le April Century. It seems that a Miss Le Row, a teacher in the Central Grammar School, in Brooklyn, had been collecting the absurdest of the mistakes of pupils in their recitations, answers and compositions. When she had a grand pile che determined to publish them in book form, and she was a self-rain to ask if she might dedicate the sold by min. She sent him proof sheets.

dedicate the state min. She sent him proof sheets.

He made up a magezine article to help the book along and sent her proofa of that. He saleo got her to change the title from "Teaching the Young Idoa" to "English as She Is Taught." She cut his magazine proofs materially, taking out what she thought reflected unpleasantly on her profession. The article as he wrote it was worth $250, but she much reduced it, and Mark made a kick for the full price and got it. When the check came he made it over to her and mailed it to her, so that she got the money as well as the trementals got the money as well as the trementals. she got the money as well as the tremen-dous puff. He had never seen her in his life.

Detroit Free Press. Up in the mountains about Marietts, of Ga., we came across a tall, bare-footed, bare-legged girl, apparently about 20 years it old, who eat on the ground in front of a log crbin with her feet in a sand-pile. She is made no move to get up, and the mother, who came to the door as we rode up, noticed her and yelled out: "Sarah! Sarah!" "What?," drawled Sarah! Sarah! Sarah!" "What?," drawled Sarah! as to none!" ""Ob, you hain!t! Gettlemen, excuse ne!" She picked up a limb and statted for Sarah. Sarah jumped up, got a whack on the back as she dedged a stump, and as she cailed over the bush is fence in front of the house the limb tool her again with all proper energy. "No, whe hain't get no manners, and that's so," to said the mother, as she flung down the weapon and came back to us; "I want her of chop wood and her carn and read." Up in the mountains about Marietts and came back to us: "I want her o chop wood and hoe corn and read hakespeare, and the old man he wants her to trap and shoot and learn Letin, and betwixt the hauling and pulling we've got her manners all upset."

though it is a fact that the Same draw better congregations than the majority of ministers. Still, as the Times-Star has heretofore remarked, these sensational revivalists bring the methods and jokes of the ministrel stage and circus ring into the pulpit. The mejority of sober, God-fearing Christians are disgusted by their antics. It recalls a story told about the "Boy Preacher." Harrison. Just as he began one of his nervous, disjointed haranques a young man rose and started for the door. "Stop!" cried Harrison, pointing his long, skinny forefinger at him, "will you stay and hear this sermon, or will you be damned forever?" "Well," said the young man, "upon mature reflection I prefer the latter." And so the devout and truly plous, the bone and sinew of the churches, would prefer almost anything to a clown in the pulpit.

Hugh Conway's Death.

Mancheter Conrier.

There is one circumstance touching the borderland of Italian superstition in connection with the death of Mr. Fargus that is little known. During his stay at Naples he met the late Lord Houghton (Richard Monckton Milnee), and it chanced at that time there was opened up at Pompeli one of those famous and long-buried villas. Lord Houghton was anxious that his young confere should accompany him on a visit to the spot, and the peer used his influence with the government to obtain the necessary permission. Some obstacles for a time prevailed, as the Italians have a belief that two out of a company of visitors to such scenes will surely die before the end of the year; but the authorities at leugh yielded to Lord Houghton's request. The visit was made, and the strange fact remains that the aged poet and young novelist were both dead within the predicted period. "Somewhere in the dark the shadow sits and waits."

Little Ruth was so fortunate as to have a grandpa and a great-grandpa. The great-grandfather lived at a distance, and when he one day appeared, to make his first visit since her babyhood, she was greatly puzzled by the repetition of titles.

"He is your grandpa, you know," said manma.

"But I've got a grandpa!"
"Oh, well, this is your great-grandpa."
"Must I call him so?"
"Yes, it it inn't too long."
"And what shall I call my other one?"
"Oh, he's just 'grandpa."
The little brain took in the explanation, it ordently draw if a cyn conclusions.

Dr. Picce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of th's great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimentals, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had bailed their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of a curreal. Yet we not provide the comparison of the relief and cure of a curreal, but as a most precumended as a "curreal," but as a most precumended as a "curreal," but as a most procumended as a "curreal," but as a most procumended as a woman's peculiar allments.
